Description:

The Guneem see themselves as caretakers of man. Just trying to keep them out of trouble. Some of the population of man discount this idea, while others embrace it.

A riding bear looks very similar to a large brown bear from earth with a few interesting differences. First their fur is colored like an earth calico cat and each riding bear's color pattern is unique. The calico colors are dark brown, white, blue-grey, and fox-red. As they age the fur color is taken over by grey beginning at the chin and neck.

Their eye colors vary considerably and occasionally they don't match.

Guneem mate for life and will always be found near each other. When near the time to birth the pair seek privacy away from men and will not reappear for about a year.
